Thursday, October 5, 1916.

In the current issue of the American Legal News, one of the leading law publications of the country is a five page article by George F. Lawrence L.L.B. of the Vermont and New York bar, now residing at Manchester.

The Windsor Journal suggests this sage advice: "Don't get so excited over the tariff, the Mexican question and preparedness as to forget to lay in a supply of coal and potatoes as both are likely to be higher before spring."

The United States public health service asks some pertinent questions as follows: Do you maintain a polluted well and then complain about the undertaker's bill? Do you think screening is too expensive and then blame disease on the climate? Do you insist on sanitary cigar factories and then use a public cigar cutter? Do you carry a fine handkerchief and then forget to cover your mouth when you cough?

So many efficiency engineers want to talk to Henry Ford and point out his wasteful methods, that it is necessary to constantly guard him against them; so he blunders along, making a million dollars a week—Howe's Monthly.

Every man who has ever made a success in life could have done more and better if he hadn't been obliged to spend so much time listening to the advice of men whose failures have proclaimed to the world that their opinions are of no value.

In Windham county an experiment is being made in planting steelhead trout in West river. This stream is some fifty miles in length and there has been practically no fishing in it for a hundred years. In early history it was a salmon stream, but the dam and the sewage along the Connecticut killed the salmon out long ago. For a few miles along the lower course of the river and in the setback from the Connecticut are bass and pike, but there do not go up where the water is swifter. The steelhead experiment will be watched with interest. If the steelhead will thrive in West river they ought to do well in other streams where the native trout have been driven out by poorer fish and by the sawdust, sewage and other refuse which has spoiled the fishing in so many of the larger streams. There are enough streams in Vermont to furnish all the fresh water fish wanted in the state if the problems of stocking with the right fish and proper conservation can be solved.

Corinthian Brass.
That which was known as Corinthian brass is said to have been a mixture of gold, silver and brass. There is a legend to the effect that when Mummius destroyed the city of Corinth by fire the configuration melted all metals, which ran down the streets, and the three mentioned above ran together and formed the alloy named.

No More Backache for Her
Mrs. J. M. Gaskill, Etna Green, Ind., writes: "I suffered from severe backache and sharp pains shooting through my back until I could not stoop over and get up without aid. This standard remedy for kidney and bladder ailments can be taken with safety for backache, swollen ankles, and rheumatic pains. Sold everywhere.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Mr. Albert Keller of Rochester, N. Y., was employed for years by the Rochester Optical company as a skilled lens worker at a salary of not less than $8.00 a day. Then Mr. Keller consulted Frederic Ten Brock, the astrologer and clairvoyant and here is given part of a letter from Mr. Keller to the life reader.

"When you told me that my former man was angry on account of a slanderous accusation, I acted as you advised. As a result I not only received my position back, but was advanced in standing. Since then your advice on money matters has been worth ten thousand dollars to me."

TOWN HIGHWAYS AT NIGHTTIME

The Advantage of High Power Street Lights.

ARC AND TUNGSTEN LAMP.

For Appearance's Sake, as Well as For the Convenience and Safety of Its Citizens, It is the Duty of a Municipality to Have Its Lighting System Well Developed.

By FRANK ROBERTS,
Author of "Modern City Planning and Maintenance."

A city or town may be said to have two problems, each of which may be solved by the use of the arc and tungsten lamp. The first is the problem of the more picturesque, and it is not infrequently the impression by which the city is best known. For this reason as well as for the convenience and safety of its citizens it is the duty of a city to have its lighting system planned with as much care and attention as is devoted to any other phase of its design.

Incidentally, while a necessity, offer at the same time opportunities for decorative treatment, and they may thus be made to serve as an embellishment to the city, both by day and by night. Where, however, should, wherever possible, be carried underground.

In Germany the best practice in street illumination is to have powerful lighting are lamps, giving at some height rather than to have more numerous and smaller lamps placed at a lower elevation.

The basic reason for so placing the lamps is to secure the most uniform distribution of light possible. The sun, a single light, furnishes the best object lesson in even distribution of light, and could a city be lit by a single lamp the result would be the most nearly ideal obtainable. Such a lamp would, of course, need to be hung at a great height and be of great power. From a commercial point of view it would not be economical.

In Germany, where electric illumination has been for years a highly developed science, the fact has long been established beyond question that the best results are obtained with arc lamps placed from thirty to sixty feet in height, according to their illuminating power. A directly contrary practice is much in vogue in America, that in which electric lamps with from three to five tungsten lamps, at a height of from fifteen to sixteen feet, are placed at intervals of from thirty to sixty feet. This is a costly method of lighting and one which is injurious to the eyes on account of the unequal distribution of light, the pedestrian being more or less blinded in the immediate vicinity of the light with contraction of the pupils, while a few steps further the pupils must dilate. This constant alteration produces a fatigue, the cause of which is not understood by the public. In cities abroad, with streets suitably lighted, the illumination remains unimpaired, being agreeably uniform.

The superiority of German street illumination cannot be attributed to any particular favorable factors. It is rather a refinement at every possible point. The whole subject is treated in a thoroughgoing manner, and improvements all along the line are adopted. Among the causes which are to blame for conditions in the United States is that of lack of uniformity in systems and installations in most of our cities. Along a given street will be found city lighting systems implemented by private lighting of a different character, which produces a jumbled and inartistic effect. Such conditions may arise from lack of power to handle the situation on the part of the municipal officials, or from inequality before the law, or from the control of an obstructive officer.

However, if advantageous circumstances necessitate the use of low lamps, ornamental metal stimulants of graceful design, equipped with lamps in artistic globes and with the wires underground, are much to be preferred to the ugly wooden poles carrying lamps and overhead wires or to the feeble and inefficient lights which span the streets of some of our cities.
